

Dr. Ron Dillow

Q: I think that I need a lot of dental work and the cost concerns me. Are payment plans available to help me?

A: You are not alone. The cost of dental treatment can be a great concern to a number of people. The first step is to determine the treatment options that best match your financial situation and desired outcome.

Treatment can also be done in stages to spread the cost out over time. No treatment should be started without a clear understanding of your options and cost.

Luckily, financial options exist to help spread the cost over time. Many of my patients use credit cards to buy now and pay off over a few months. If treatment costs are higher, no interest and low interest financing plans over a longer term are available.

With so many options available, don't let the fear of cost stop you from getting the care you need and deserve.
