

Dr. Ron Dillow

Q: My dentist has referred me to a specialist for treatment again. I am wondering why dentists do this?

A: I am sure you would prefer to have the dentist you know and trust do your treatment. Dentists have differing levels of training and experience. If a you have the need for treatment that is out of the dentist's comfort zone, a referral is in your best interest.

I have many, many hours of training and years of experience doing many procedures that specialists also do. I can do these procedures with confidence and achieve a great outcome. Occasionally, I will refer to a specialist if I think the patient would be better served in that office.

My patients appreciate being taken care of both in my office and at trusted specialists' offices.
