Q: I have a tooth that has had a root canal but is still painful to cold. Why is this tooth still bothering me?

A: I can understand your concern. A root canal almost always takes care of this problem. One of several things may be going on.

It is possible that you have an extra nerve in the tooth that the first root canal did not deaden. A specialist can usually detect this.

You may simply be biting with a small amount of excess force on the tooth.

And in some cases, you may have a nearby tooth causing the problem but referring the pain to this tooth.
